

Koichiro Kuwahara is a Professor of Cardiovascular Medicine at Shinshu University School of Medicine in Matsumoto, Nagano, Japan. His works focus on the molecular mechanisms underlying the development of heart failure and the translational research for cardiovascular diseases. He obtained M.D. from the Faculty of Medicine, Kyoto University in 1991 and received Ph.D. in Medicine from the Graduate School of Medicine, Kyoto University in 2000 under the supervision of Dr. Yoshihiko Saito and Professor Kazuwa Nakao. After a period of postdoctoral fellow at the Graduate School of Medicine, Kyoto University under the supervision of Dr. Yoshihiko Saito and Professor Kazuwa Nakao and at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas under the supervision of Professor Eric N. Olson, he was appointed to the Graduate School of Medicine, Kyoto University in 2006 as a Junior Associate Professor. He was appointed to a Professor of the Department of Cardiovascular Medicine at Shinshu University School of Medicine in 2016.