

Abraham Méndez-Fernández obtained his Master's degree in Physiological Sciences from the Universidad Autónoma de Puebla. During this time, he participated in a few research projects aimed at studying the activity of interneurons residing in the central pattern generators of the cat. Currently, he is a PhD candidate in Biomedical Sciences at Tecnológico de Monterrey in Mexico. His research interests comprise cardiovascular diseases, mitochondrial bioenergetics of the heart, electrophysiology and bioinformatics.